

WELCOME.

In this new series we'll be sitting down with senior leaders from across the public sector to discuss their working life and experience, particularly interesting or noteworthy projects they've been involved with as well as wider advice and reflections for our community.

On this month's edition, Tim Farr, Senior Partner at Starfish Search, sat down with Paul Martin to talk about his time as Chief Executive in local government spanning nearly three decades, what he's learned since making the move into interim management and consultancy a few years ago as well as his recent work advising local government in the United States.

